AT CHESAPEAKE FAIR

Lancaster, Va. November 10.—The Chesapeake Agricultural Fair, which began Wednesday, ended yesterday. Owing to the wind and rain storm that swept over this region Thursday, the fair grounds were closed on that day, but the attendance on Friday and Saturday was very large. The balloon ascension on Friday was witnessed by thousands of people.

The racing was spirited and hotly contested. The race horses came not only from the Northern Neck counties,

This remarkable game bird is the warlest of all forest fowls, and it is only in the rarest instances that a hunter can get in a shot. In the spring, however, and on warm Indian summer days, they still drum in sport on many wooded milisides of Bucklingham County.

Another prediction: Randolph-Macon will see a vastly different foe from that which met the Yellow Jackets early in the season. There will be more fight, and the team will play more nearly as a unit. The material is there summer days, they still drum in sport on many wooded milisides of Bucklingham County.

incline to the belief expressed by both Coach Elliott and Captain Todd, of the university, that these mutterings do not originate at Scorgetown. We have no reason to believe that the Blue and Gray authorities either authorize or condone the sindster charges, but we do believe that it is up to the authorities to deny them and if possible to stop their recurrence.

Each of these two great schools of the South needs the other. See because of the ill-advised statements of some who have allowed their dices to run away with their judgment, they appear to be at loggerhead athletic relations should be severed because of these remarks, it would serious loss to both. They have been clean rivals in the past, and we are ful that the last of the present argument has been heard.

Growing from a small beginning into probably the most important for ball date on the local calendar, the annual conflict between the two modic colleges of Richmond will take place Thurnday afternoon. It is going to a gais occasion, for the alumni and student bodies of both teams will be hand, making among themselves a goodly crowd. But more than that, it going to be a good game. But schools have exceptionally circus thams, as neither has uncovered its full strength. Somehow or other, they manage do things on that big day which have never been done before. Working a season for the one game, with all others merely conditioning processes, whe season for the way between the allies and the Turks pales into insignificance.

It has been arranged to have a street paralle of the student boffer of both schools just before the game. Bands have been engaged, and each will vis with the other for favorable impression. Particulately will run high, but while the rivalry is intense, there is no fil-feeling. The game will be cleanly played, and the better team will win.

Trinity has just closed a tennis tournament with Guilford College in which the local team came out the victors in both singles and doubles. The home team won nine out of the nine sets which were played. The tournament was played on the college courts to the north of the Alispaugh Hall. Trinity's team was composed of N. I. White and A. R. Anderson, and took three sets from Brown and Hartman, of Guilford, and in singles each of the Trinity men took the straight sets from his opponent. The contest in doubles proved to be a hard fought affair. Though the home team was never in danger of losing a set, the Guilford boys put up a game fight, and made the event interesting from first to last. Sensation. Virginia Polytechnic Institute and Washington and Lee will play no more footbail. Virginia Polytechnic Institute is certain that Washington and Lee and Lee acted in bad faith in playing the two professed men. An alumnum of Blacksburg said that Washington and Lee knew that the two men had played propessional baseball and that the officials at the Lexington institution admitted this knowledge. The difference arose over the construction of the agreement, Washington and Lee holding that Virginia Polytechnic Institute knew that she intended playing the men, while Virginia Polytechnic Institute maintains that the understanding was different. With the general breaking of athletic relations in the State, nearly all of the teams will have to go to foreign territory to get games. It took a jong time to clean up athletics at the several schools in the State, and things should not be allowed to drift back to the old condition. Better no games than that.
